

Meet Mia

“Mia had brain damage, cerebral palsy and epilepsy. I honestly cannot tell you what else was said as I was a complete mess after the words ‘brain damaged’ were spoken. You just don’t think it will ever happen to you.

It was a few weeks before we could take Mia home. They’d said the brain damage was so bad that Mia wouldn’t be able to do much at all. We were completely devastated. I was terrified. Every little movement she made scared me thinking she was having a seizure. I was on edge for a very long time

It took me a while to get my head around what the future would now hold, to grieve for the child I thought I was going to have and the things she would miss out on.”

I don’t let myself think about Mia’s future. It’s too hard. But what I do wish for, is that Mia would smile more. She deserves to be happy. For the first time, I believe that she will be and that’s because of bibic.”

It was a friend of mine who suggested I take Mia to bibic. We went for a consultation and met our therapist for the first time. We talked over Mia’s history and what she could do, they explained what service they provided and how he could help Mia reach her full potential, whatever that might be.

I came away feeling very positive and excited for the next chapter in Mia’s life. I couldn’t wait to get started on our bibic journey.”
